

INSOMNIA ACUTE INFLAMMATION OF THE NERVES. THEY ARE OVERSTRAINED NEAR TO BREAKING AND CANNOT BE NOURISHED BY THE IMPOVERISHED SYSTEM. SLEEPLESS, WASTING NIGHTS LEAVE YOU HAGGARD AND WORN. A DEADLY OPPRESSION SETTLES UPON MIND AND BODY; MADNESS FOLLOWS. NERVE FIBRE MUST BE MADE, NERVE FORCE REGAINED, THEN THE BLOOD WILL NOURISH AND MIND AND BODY WILL RECOVER.

PAIN'E'S Celery Compound

The World's remedy for disease. Makes nerve fibre, nerve force; keeps the organs of the body in healthy action. The blood is made clean, rich and in full quantity. Muscles and tissues are nourished, invigorated, and the body is healthy.

Rev. T. F. Stauffer, Lincoln, Neb., writes: "For nearly a year past I have felt myself running down. My nervous system was gradually growing worse; I was troubled a good deal with insomnia. I felt that something must be done, and concluded to use Paine's Celery Compound. After the first few days' use I began to improve; now I feel like myself once more. I can sleep well, my nervous system is rapidly improving, and I believe a radical cure is being effected. Paine's Celery Compound is a splendid remedy, and I can conscientiously commend it to the suffering in like cases."

McLEAN ON TRUSTS

Democratic Candidate Clearly Defines His Position.

SEES GREAT DANGER AHEAD

Encroachments of Business Combinations Should Be Curbed.

HE SUGGESTS A REMEDY THEREFOR

Believes That There Should Be a Limit to Earnings as There Should Be a Limit to the Life of a Franchise—Reply to Bourke Cockran's Speech and a Criticism of Senator Hanna.

Hon. John R. McLean, the Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio, in an interview at Columbus on Thursday, clearly defined his position regarding that public question of great moment—the trust. With befitting candor he expressed his views and suggested a remedy where the business combinations encroached upon the rights of the people. Bourke Cockran's speech on trusts during the Chicago conference was the occasion of the interview. Mr. McLean dissecting the effort of the famous orator in characteristic style. He also paid his respects to Senator Mark Hanna, and concluded with a review of the recent slump in Wall street stocks.

Following is the interview with Mr. McLean in full:

Dissected Cockran's Effort.

"McLean, did you read the Bourke Cockran speech at Chicago?"

"Yes."

"What did you think of it?"

"Nothing at all; a lot of words. Some of the eastern papers seem to find much in it, but I must say that it does not strike me with any force. Mr. Cockran is a splendid talker. He can afford to pay compliments to orators, not fearing competition himself. That trust—the trust of oratory—he can afford to pat on the back. As for any arguments, or, in fact, as to anything about a trust, he does not seem to know anything of it. He starts out by saying that he does not know what a trust means and will somebody please explain it to him. He wants to know who is hurt, and where? Where has this octopus got possession of somebody? On whom is it acting? Where is its lair? He talks about a 'hydrated monster'."

"Mr. Cockran makes the charge that there is nothing menacing about trusts. In fact, his Chicago speech was a wordy jumble and a declaration that because he did not know anything about a trust, such a thing did not exist. That is a poor argument. While Mr. Cockran knows a great deal, there is a great deal that he does not know. Mr. Cockran is essentially a talker, not a business man, and I do not believe that he has examined into what is called a trust. A trust is a very simple thing to understand, and, understood, will be regarded by every business man as a threat, as a menace to business affairs. Let me illustrate a trust as it works when put in practical shape."

"I know a city where there were 11 separate, distinct street railways. Each one had its charter or franchise, and was working under it. Each road had a president, a vice president, a board of directors, a superintendent, a treasurer and secretary, a set of bookkeepers, a set of clerks and sets of working men to build, relay and repair the roads. A combination of capital was gotten together."

"An Illustration.

"They said, we will buy these roads as cheaply as possible, bringing all the paraphernalia of business to bear, threats of competition, threats of paralysis, threats of reduction of fares, and we will, by hook or crook, buy these roads. We will put them all under one president, one vice president, one treasurer, one superintendent, and one set of workmen. The plan was carried into execution. Of 11 roads there were bought up, 10 presidents done away with, and 10 sets of officers and 10 sets of workmen. Where each road had its president, its officers and its workmen, it is now under a single head. For illustration, say there were 300 workmen doing the mechanical work of the 11 roads. Now I suppose 50 men can do the work. The capitalists argued that where 300 men were employed by the week, we will need only 50. With every line but one in the city, by our service we can hurry the men from one part of the town to the other at no cost to ourselves. Tools and men are carried by our own cars. See the saving, gentlemen! See what that trust, or that combination—I don't care what you call it—effected. Ten presidents were set aside, 10 sets of officers on the lines—salaried men—were set aside, bookkeepers, clerks and working men. The electricians of the electric roads and the engineers of the cable roads were dismissed, or are fast being put aside, and one compact body is doing the work. What a trust! The people have not today the executive that we declare. To use an old phrase, I think there should be legislation for the doves instead of the hawks, for the lambs instead of the wolves. I would not, under any conditions, want to see the people today that is as strong carrying us to a financial fall as anything is sure in this world, he goes off into verbal pyrotechnics, paints the big, glib, and various subjects that he touches with his beautiful phrases, and in the great mass of cloudy, misty stuff he makes his escape to New York to be congratulated by his friends. "It is a doubtful compliment for a Democrat to receive the approbation of Republicans and of Socialists. Mr. Cockran may find enjoyment in the little parties on the back he will get from some of the eastern press and Hanna partisans, but it is a passing thing. Results will confute him, for rather than to be sent to represent, for while we all find in Mr. Cockran a charming man, we know him to be of most unsettled opinions, and frequently opposing his declarations. A prettier speech, a higher sounding one, a better framed one than he made against the income tax could not be found. He made it on Tuesday, for instance, and on Wednesday we find him voting for its passage and its execution. There is action facing words—deeds, wind. Pass Respects to Mr. Hanna.

"Mr. Hanna says he doesn't fear trusts. He doesn't. Nor the men who are associated with him in business. He is not a comforting one to him. This is that now the trusts are building up and getting into form, and the workmen are under this organization and are powerless to go elsewhere. Mr. Cockran said in his speech he wanted competition. What is so stifling then, if I am correct, as to ideas of what constitutes a trust? Does consolidation mean competition, or does it mean the crushing of all competition? I claim it means the taking away of competition."

Stumps to Cockran.

"Mr. Hanna says that prosperity is here, and here to stay. What a refutation of what he says in the stock reports of yesterday—a shrinkage of $25,000,000. If that is stable, if that is firm business, if that means real values, then his conception of prosperity here to stay and mine differ, as we seem to differ on every other question, both public and economic. I append the stock table as evidence of what I say. Read the depreciation in stocks since May 13, the day of the death of Roosevelt P. Flower. Does that mean stability?"
